

Lt. General Ulysses S. Grant

An historical impression of the Commanding General of all Federal forces fighting to restore the Union.

Lt. General Ulysses S. Grant was the architect of the triumph of the North in our American Civil War. Born in Ohio to humble beginnings and always an unpretentious person, he rose to the command of all Federal forces in the Civil War and eventually became 18th president.

Veteran reenactor and Grant impressionist, Kenneth J. Serfass has been a student of Grant's life since age 8. He credits his twenty years as a Marine to a better understanding of Grant's strategic mindset and how he faced the war and personal challenges in his life.

Ken takes his impression to heart and presents Grant first person, with all the honor and respect appropriate to this great American. He wears the three-starred uniforms of Grant of 1864, showcasing his strategic brilliance in overseeing the overland campaign in Virginia, while also overseeing all other military actions across the continent.

Ken also presents the general following the war and into this time as President Grant.

CONTACT Kenneth J. Serfass

GySgt, USMC, (ret.)

tubamaestro2001@yahoo.com